resistance calls on us all

In 2023, conflict, persecution, climate disasters and human rights violations brought the world's total displaced population to a record 114 million people. Throughout this year, that number will balloon to an estimated 130 million.

One hundred and thirty million people. The numbers are daunting. From Sudan to Gaza, to Burma and beyond, more than three times the population of Canada is leaving everything they know behind, just in order to survive – our counterparts among them.

How do we support long-term, social justice work in such unstable and volatile times?

We do it together. We soften our edges to form bonds, but steel our resolve and build backbone. Through solidarity, we replenish our humanity and focus on the possible.

In our annual report, you'll read about our counterparts struggling through current conflicts and others working under the long shadows of a violent past. You'll meet people whose existence has been jeopardized and learn how their resistance to injustice continues despite dire circumstances.

Starkly put, their existence is resistance.

Inter Pares exists precisely because such resistance calls on us all to witness, materially support and speak up for a fuller view of humanity.

The times we're in challenge us to be our best and to override the paralysis of overwhelm. We keep moving, supporting our counterparts, so they can survive to resist another day. We invite courage, growth and responsibility to guide us. Together, we can make Inter Pares the strongest it can be for the world it exists to transform.

In you, our Inter Pares community, we have a treasure, a gift built from foundations laid nearly 50 years ago. This community of solidarity is an example of what is good that generations of staff, counterparts, donors and supporters have nurtured.

Thank you for moving forward with us.

survival is resistance:

supporting counterparts
during times of war

In April 2023, Sudan's military clashed with paramilitary forces in the capital, Khartoum. The ensuing war has displaced more than 9 million people so far. Thousands have lost their homes, loved ones and lives.

“This is happening to our people, to our families,” says Ilham Ibrahim, executive director of the Sudanese Organization for Research and Development (SORĐ), Inter Pares’ counterpart of 20 years.

SORĐ is a vital voice in Sudan’s feminist scene. Before the war, they coordinated a range of programs, including providing legal aid to women navigating Sudan’s misogynist family law system. But 2023 saw the organization pivot into emergency response, focusing on food distribution and support for displaced women.

“I see how people are suffering and I know I can’t meet this demand, but we have no other option than to continue.”

Ilham Ibrahim,
executive director of SORĐ

Organizing in exile has been a battle of its own for another of our Sudanese counterparts. SWRC (pronounced “source”) is an advocacy and training hub for feminist youth activists in Khartoum. Today, its members are scattered across Sudan, eastern Africa and beyond – so SWRC is building a secure space online to continue engaging refugee youth.

As the war grinds on, Inter Pares donors have allowed us to send our Sudanese counterparts crucial financial support to help them adapt their work.

“There’s a lot of uncertainty about the future,” says Ilham. “It’s very hard to organize because no one knows the dynamics of this war and what will happen after.”

Whatever happens, the survival of local feminist civil society organizations is imperative to ensure Sudanese people themselves lead future social justice work in Sudan. We will support our counterparts’ survival as the war rages on – so one day soon, their resistance can flourish again. When they can resume their long-term feminist legal work, youth movement building and advocacy for gender justice, participatory democracy and sustainable peace, we’ll be right there with them.

by the numbers

Inter Pares supports activist struggles in partnership with organizations around the world. Here are a few results of our collective work from 2023.

We supported more than 40 counterparts in Burma. They organized 901 trainings and community meetings on health, human rights, women's rights and gender justice, the environment, peace and sustainable development for nearly 30,000 participants.

Despite El Salvador's restrictions on sexual education in schools, Colectiva Feminista continued their comprehensive sex-ed work with sympathetic educators. They trained 35 teachers who called this their "hidden curriculum."

In the lead up to Guatemala's 2023 elections, Red de Organizaciones de Mujeres de Ixcán visited eight communities and connected with nearly 400 people to promote women's participation in the vote.

Fondo Lunaria trained 50 LGBTQI+ leaders in Colombia. In Guatemala, Asociación Lambda provided sexuality, human rights or digital security training to 36 queer and trans people in rural and Indigenous communities.

In the Philippines, Likhaan's network of youth volunteer health promoters expanded to more than 300 people. Volunteers organized community education sessions, distributed condoms and provided basic sexual health info and clinic referrals to their peers.

Counterparts in West Africa – Inades Formation (Burkina Faso, Togo and Côte d'Ivoire), Tiniguena (Guinea-Bissau) and ENDA Pronat (Senegal) – trained nearly 8,000 rural people, small-scale farmers and fishers in biodiversity-benefitting climate solutions and sustainable farming techniques.

In Guinea-Bissau, Senegal, Togo and Côte d'Ivoire, we supported reforestation of 41 hectares of mangroves.

Despite a law mandating them, many schools in Bangladesh do not have sexual harassment complaint committees. By the end of 2023, Nijera Kori had successfully pressured more than 400 schools to establish them. Plus, Nijera Kori's own 76 youth-led committees continued to denounce and educate against sexual harassment and child marriage in their communities.

In Peru, Centro de Desarrollo Andino (SISAY) supported 126 survivors of forced sterilization to start small-scale farming projects to help feed their families and earn income. SISAY collected testimonies from 35 of these women to shed light on the horrors they endured and highlight their activism.

navigating anti-LGBTQI+
violence in post-war
Guatemala

In 2023, Guatemala witnessed 33 murders of LGBTQI+ individuals. Our Guatemalan counterpart Asociación Lambda documented this surge in violence against the LGBTQI+ community, shedding light on an issue often overlooked.

Longstanding racial, colonial and gender hierarchies have deep roots in the country, reaching a high point during Guatemala's civil war between 1960 and 1996. While widely underreported until recently, the armed conflict further endangered queer and trans people. Little progress has been made in ensuring justice for these crimes or addressing anti-LGBTQI+ violence in post-war Guatemala.

Since the 2010s, the LGBTQI+ movement has engaged in relentless activism to carve out spaces of acceptance for their diverse identities. But the government still resists these efforts, upholding the systemic discrimination and socio-political exclusion of the LGBTQI+ community. More recently, the 2023 electoral process saw right-wing candidates exploiting anti-LGBTQI+ sentiments for political gain, aggravating the violence.

Addressing today's anti-LGBTQI+ violence requires confronting the past through an intersectional and systemic approach. Peace offers an opportunity to acknowledge past atrocities, but true reconciliation comes from addressing the underlying causes of poverty, violence and discrimination.

With Inter Pares' support, Asociación Lambda is at the forefront of the fight for LGBTQI+ justice. Their work takes an intersectional approach to memory building, advocacy and capacity training with LGBTQI+ groups in different regions. They reach beyond Guatemala City to engage rural and Indigenous communities, affirming queers and trans existence.

“Specific groups have specific needs.”

Director Carlos Valdés
Asociación Lambda

Lambda views the results of the 2023 elections as a new opening for the LGBTQI+ movement to expand. Despite political tensions and violence, Lambda navigates the complex terrain of post-conflict Guatemala, adapting their programming to ensure participants' safety.

The resilience of the LGBTQI+ community, bolstered by organizations like Lambda, fuels their efforts to create a just and inclusive post-conflict society for all.

Indigenous people in Burma envision a self-determined future

Burma and Haida Gwaii are worlds apart but neighbours in the struggle for self-determination. So, in June 2023, when Indigenous representatives from across Burma visited the islands off the coast of British Columbia to meet with members of the Haida Nation, the connection was immediate.

“They faced a similar genocide like the ethnic people in Burma have been through,” says Paul Sein Twa, who joined this learning exchange with Inter Pares support. He works with the Karen Environmental and Social Action Network (KESAN), an ethnic organization we partner with in southeastern Burma.

Paul Sein Twa from Burma speaks with Hereditary Chief Gaahlaay Lonnie Young on Haida Gwaii.

Paul is Karen, and like many ethnic people in Burma, uses “ethnic” and “Indigenous” interchangeably to describe himself. “We had similar experiences under colonization, including the banning of cultural practices and Indigenous identity.”

They talked about barriers each group has had to assert their rights under colonial powers and the different approaches each has taken to overcome them. The Haida Nation’s many-pronged activism – establishing their own museum, natural resource co-management, constitutional and legal sovereignty work – has given Paul ideas for KESAN’s future.

“One of the nation’s pillars is cultural resurgence. They brought back their totem poles, ceremonies, singing, dancing, way of life, hunting... and integrated it into their children’s education,” Paul explains.

“In the past, we thought more about the political aspects and human rights, and focused less on culture, the environment and our Indigenous peoples’ knowledge.”

For many of the visitors, this was their first exposure to a federal system of government – something they have been striving toward for many years.

And while the military junta in Burma continues its brutal campaign against the people, Paul and others persist in their resistance by planning for that peaceful, federal, self-determined future.

This learning exchange was organized by an Indigenous peoples’ network in Burma, with support from a multi-donor fund. Our program in Burma is undertaken in partnership with the Government of Canada.

Inter Pares – which means among equals – believes in solidarity, not charity, as our approach to international cooperation. We work with courageous activists and inspiring organizations throughout the world to build peace, advance justice and globalize equality.

In 2023, we collaborated with more than 70 social justice organizations.

We put feminism into practice

Issues of equality are important elements of our political analysis. We value ways of working that promote collaboration, foster good processes and encourage the agency of those with less power.

We believe in the strength of women

We promote women's leadership, economic well-being, health and autonomy.

We promote food sovereignty

We work with farmers and others to promote food systems that support small farmers, feed communities and ensure a healthy planet.

We engage in peacebuilding and reconciliation

We enable grassroots participation in peacebuilding efforts, and support those who challenge the power structures that lead to violence, displacement, poverty and corruption.

We support refugees, migrants and displaced people

We provide political, humanitarian and financial assistance to refugees, displaced people and those who support them, through documenting abuses, providing health services, building livelihoods, and promoting peace and democracy.

We promote fair economies

We collaborate in the promotion of fair trade agreements, support communities affected by resource extraction, and help rural communities develop management plans to protect resources and livelihoods.

We advocate for strong, public healthcare systems

Health is a political issue fundamental to social justice. We promote an approach that addresses the nexus of health, poverty, equality and social conditions. We advocate for integrated, accessible and publicly funded healthcare systems.

celebrating our donor community

Donating is more than a financial transaction: it is a political act. In 2023, our donor community continued to build upon Inter Pares' foundations laid nearly 50 years ago. They showed us over and over that solidarity, feminism and justice are what they hold dear.

Here is what they said inspires them to give to Inter Pares.

“Years ago, I was attracted to the idea of women in the Global South finding creative ways to support themselves, their families and their communities. Inter Pares seemed a good fit and I have not been disappointed. Not only is the agency involved in areas like Burma and Sudan, but there are usually some successes – good news in these troubled times.”

Last year saw different iterations of conflict rise across regions. Our community of supporters strengthened their commitment to peace and social justice through their donations to Inter Pares, supporting our counterparts and activists around the world.

“Inter Pares is a vibrant organization with a strong core and the wisdom and passion needed to keep evolving to make the largest difference possible. They put intersectional feminist principles into practice both in the organization’s daily functioning as well as their work globally to support social justice and women’s equality.”

Charlene Senn

In 2023:

We welcomed 175 new donors into the Inter Pares community.

A total of 3,610 donors gave $1,909,430.

IN FOCUS

solidarity is resistance:

adapting to a crisis in Burkina Faso

Since 2016, the security situation in Burkina Faso has rapidly deteriorated as clashes between government forces and armed groups have intensified.

In 2023, conflict-related violence killed nearly 7,600 people as armed groups deliberately targeted civilians, including farmers.

Through it all, Inter Pares' counterpart, Inades-Formation Burkina Faso, continues their essential work with rural communities. They support farmers, particularly women, through training in agroecology – agriculture that works with nature to produce food in Earth-friendly ways. This training, alongside ongoing community sessions about gender equality, supports these communities to have more agency and control over their lives and livelihoods.

As the conflict and ongoing threat of violence makes traveling to certain areas of the country difficult, Inades-Formation has found ways to overcome this barrier.

To cut down the need for travel, Inades-Formation provides agroecological training to local community members in hard-to-reach areas. The training enables them to serve as resources to their fellow farmers.

“We’ve relied heavily on these individuals,” says Isidore Della, national director of Inades-Formation. Thanks to the efforts of trained local farmers, our counterpart can continue to build capacity in farming communities from afar.

“They’re on the ground, they’re local and they can get the job done without too much risk.”

Inades-Formation also facilitates field trips for women farmers to visit model farms practicing agroecology. These trips are valuable opportunities for the farmers to learn about sustainable farming techniques that they can then implement in their own fields.

While these efforts aim to strengthen food security and promote sustainable farming practices in Burkina Faso, lack of access to water and the arid climate of the region remain major challenges.

Through it all, we are committed to supporting Inades-Formation so they can continue promoting food sovereignty and women farmers’ agency in Burkina Faso.

In partnership with the Government of Canada.

addressing injustices

Alongside our counterparts, we're tackling inequalities from many angles. Here are some key moments from our work in 2023.

Health

📍 On Parliament Hill, a Canadian Health Coalition rally – that we endorsed – demanded the Government of CANADA strengthen a public approach to healthcare rather than further entrench privatization.

Food sovereignty

📍 To mark International Women's Day, we hosted a conversation about the challenges rural farming women face – and the ways they are breaking those barriers down. Joining us were Jenn Pfenning (National Farmers Union, CANADA), Mariamé Ouattara (gender expert, BURKINA FASO) and Debiya Ifra Sow (Enda Pronat, SENEGAL). In INDIA, our counterpart Tamil Nadu Women's Collective marked the day with a celebration of women farmers and their work to promote food sovereignty through growing millet.

📍 We mourned the loss of Periyapatna Venkatasubbaiah Satheesh, founder and director of Deccan Development Society, our counterpart in INDIA since the early 1990s. He was a passionate promoter of food sovereignty that centred women farmers' knowledge.

Peace and democracy

📍 For more than a year, Inter Pares advocated for the re-forming of a BURMA parliamentary friendship group in CANADA. 2023 finally saw its relaunch. With input from civil society, including Inter Pares, this non-partisan group of MPs and senators created a petition calling on Canada to take specific actions related to Burma.

Women's rights and gender justice

📍 When an international human rights court heard the case of a woman who was denied an abortion in EL SALVADOR despite her high-risk pregnancy, Colectiva Feminista staged events with live coverage of the hearing for nearly 1,000 people. The events included space for reflection on the dire consequences of the country's complete abortion ban. Colectiva held a separate public event prior to the hearing with the Canadian ambassador and Inter Pares staff.

Economic justice

📍 Inter Pares hosted a talk about the political and economic roots of the conflict in SUDAN. With feminist activist Reem Abbas and writer Magdi El-Gizouli, we discussed where the parties to the conflict get their resources and explored ways to break these cycles of resourcing.

📍 CANADA'S tax system is working against the federal government's efforts to meet climate commitments and combat inequality, counterpart Canadians for Tax Fairness showed in a 2023 report. Policy recommendations include implementing a wealth tax and eliminating fossil fuel subsidies.

community building is resistance: hiring at Inter Pares

Equity and justice are integral to our organizational DNA, guiding every aspect of our work, including how we build our team. We believe having diverse perspectives around the table fosters creativity and enhances our ability to tackle complex social issues. Our non-hierarchical structure and consensus decision-making help ensure that every voice is valued in our hiring process.

Finding a new co-manager starts much like any hiring: a stack of CVs, a handful of interviews and a writing test. But once the hiring committee selects a final candidate the process becomes unique to Inter Pares.

At this point, we invite the selected candidate to “the rounds,” where they meet with all co-managers for discussions on their skills, commitment to social justice and mutual alignment with feminist and decolonial values. This process helps us make a collective decision and gives the candidate an opportunity to meet the team.

The interview process is reciprocal. As we assess candidates, we encourage them to assess us to ensure Inter Pares is a place where they’ll thrive.

We compensate candidates who reach the interview stage at an hourly rate equivalent to what our co-managers make. This includes the time they spend interviewing, taking the written test and participating in the rounds, regardless of the hiring decision.

Advancing social justice worldwide starts right here in our office. Our hiring process reflects our dedication to this.
